Trauma, Disruption, Internalization and Reintegration: A Self-Psychological Approach

A Workshop led by
Marc Wayne, CSW, BCD

Saturday, May 3, 2008
10 A.M. to 3 P.M.

Fee: $60.00 per participant

This workshop will explain how emotional trauma in the infant/caregiver dyad disrupts development of the self and impairs the child's capacity to pursue healthy object relations.

Traumatic experiences damage one's capacity to pursue adaptive patterns in diverse psycho-biological systems. Trauma impairs one's competence in establishing normal intimate relationships and compromises one's capacity to regulate affect in states of over-arousal. Recent findings in the fields of Attachment and Infant Research, Developmental Psychoanalysis and Psychotherapy Research have demonstrated the importance of psycho-biological attunement, affect synchrony and interactive repair within the primary caretaker/infant dyad. Failure in these interdependent systems results in experiences of acute stress and distress ultimately registering as pathogenic trauma.

Traumatic and dissociative states can result from this loss of the existential continuity in the dyad due to mal-attunement on the part of the caregivers. These early experiences have profound implications with regard to pathological emotional functioning in the future.

In this workshop, you, as therapists, will learn how your interventions can begin to repair these traumatic ruptures and create new pathways of development as a result of the positive therapeutic dyad. Case material and excerpts from relevant films will illustrate these concepts

Marc Wayne, CSW, BCD is a training analyst, faculty member, and senior supervisor at the Postgraduate Center for Mental Health, The Object Relations Institute for Psychoanalysis, and the Training Institute for Mental Health.
